Bruce Brooks, Design Engineer, M. Zion Security Systems.

When an agency of New York City needed to upgrade outdated access control systems for some of their buildings, they reached out to M. Zion Security Systems, one of Millennium's longest standing security integration partners of over 30 years.

"Their facilities had outdated stand-alone access control units that were increasingly difficult to manage.," said Bruce Brooks, Design Engineer, at M. Zion Security Systems. "We started with an upgrade of the existing locations. Millennium Ultra was selected, as it met all of the agency's requirements with a seamless upgrade path allowing for any future expansion."

"After the successful implementation of the initial upgrade, we have begun the expansion of the system into the next phase. Due to logistical issues in areas such as stairwells, we plan on using the new wireless Plexus platform. This will eliminate the need to use unsightly pipe and wire mold. Additionally, this will greatly reduce installation costs for the end user."

The Result:
An upgraded access control system with web accessible technology. The sites will now also be equipped with wireless systems in areas that previously could not be secured due to difficulties and cost of installation.
